COMMENTS: The only emission units observed at this facility were the three surface coating paint booths. The records for the VOC content and coating usage were provided, and a review of these records from January 2012 to December 2013 revealed that the highest total quantity of VOC's in the coatings used was in April 2013 with 31.158 lbs/day averaged monthly. The records for coatings used included the solvents and thinners used in the process and for cleanup. The employees are trained in the proper application of coatings, and the operation of the paint booths. The exhaust stacks for all three booths were equipped with air filters to capture any overspray, and as described by the owner, these filters are changed every couple days. No signs of overspray were observed outside of the booths. No open paint/solvent containers were observed at this facility or in the coating storage areas. A review of the previous inspection reports describes that no new process equipment has been installed since the last inspection.
